Dear friends,

Within our rural parishes life is marked by significant times of shared lamentation and celebration. The day by day, week by week, season by season routine is punctuated by the extraordinary times of tragedy and achievement.

One of my favourite books in the Old Testament is Lamentations. It's a collection of five beautiful and intensely moving Hebrew poems composed following the Fall of Jerusalem to Babylon in 587 BC. The beauty of the poetry doesn't mask the horror of that defeat but rather intensifies the reality of a sense of abandonment felt by the whole community and expressed through the pen of that Hebrew poetic genius. A modern equivalent is the poetry of the First World War which we still read today and which helps us make sense of those terrible events happening across the Channel a hundred years ago. I wonder what "lamentations" are being composed in war-torn parts of the world today.

The Church is a place where community lamentation is safely expressed. During the Foot and Mouth Disease crisis in 2001 my church at St John's Chapel became such a place with both regular daily prayer and intercession on special occasions offered as a form of lamentation. Our annual agricultural show had to be cancelled but in its place we kept a day's vigil in the church with a constant supply of food and fellowship culminating in a dale-wide service of penitence and intercession. People in that part of Weardale still remember that formal act of lamentation which went hand-in-hand with practical pastoral care for all those whose lives were changed during those difficult months.

The Church is also there for those more private times of lamentation, often following a sudden or tragic death and last year we had more than our fair share of those.

Corporate lamentation helps us make some sense of the tragedies of life. Corporate celebration helps to form who we are when we achieve some aspect of our potential. Over the past few weeks we have celebrated and blessed marriage. Kevin and Alex came to Bewcastle church for a service of blessing on their wedding which took place last year on a beach in Antigua, how I wish I'd been there, think of the sea-birds! On Easter Day Stephen and Jenny celebrated 40 years of marriage and returned to Kirklington Church for a service of blessing and renewal of vows. Bob and Dorothy recently celebrated 70 years of marriage and we held a service of blessing in their home with a great crowd of family and friends, the kitchen table groaning under the weight of wonderful food and the sideboard crammed with bottles, Mick Lawson and I made sure glasses were well-filled and what fun we all had at that gathering.

Our four parish churches are focal points for lamentation and celebration for all. We aren't "congregational" churches, but the established Church of England, or as the latest diocesan slogan puts it: God for all. Sometimes I'm asked if I think our churches will ever close. The only people who can close a parish church are the locals. It's only when local parishioners decide they can't manage the upkeep of a building and lock the doors and hand the keys to bishop that a church may close. The usual reason for closing is if there's a problem which negates our public liability insurance. Then we have to close as we did temporarily at Bewcastle after Christmas when there was an electrical problem. Luckily we had enough funds to pay for the repair and we could then re-open. But that money had to come from our own small savings and the fact of life today is that if we can't afford an essential repair no-one else will come up with the money and the doors have to be locked.

I hope that in years to come our churches will be here for regular worship and the life of prayer day by day, week by week, and season by season. That our holy spaces will be there for those times of lamentation and celebration that form us as families and as a true community. To do that we need the on-going support of our many friends as well as the faithful hard work of our elected Wardens and small congregations.

From your friend and priest,
Philip
